

CANADA'S UNIVERSITIES

IMAGINE THE POSSIBILITIES

Canadian universities attract more than 70,000 international students in full-time study each year, with over 22,000 in graduate studies. The diverse student population turns Canadian lecture halls into places for sharing experiences, languages, customs and ideas – a benefit to all of us who increasingly learn and work in a global context. Canada's universities grant a full range of degree options from the bachelor level through the master's and doctoral (PhD) levels in a multitude of programs – from business, astronomy and international relations, to genetics and fine arts. These degrees prepare students for a variety of professions and careers and offer unmatched opportunities for academic study. Currently, there are more than 10,000 undergraduate and graduate degree programs offered in Canada as well as professional degree programs and certificates. For more information on the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada (AUCC) member institutions and their respective programs, visit:

www.aucc.ca/can_uni/search/index_e.html.